

ABSTRACT

A data structure includes a parent node and a plurality of children nodes of the parent node arranged in an order. The parent node includes a first pointer to one of the children nodes and a second pointer to another of the children nodes. Each child node includes a third pointer to a next child node in the order and a fourth pointer to a previous child node in the order. The parent node can further include a fifth pointer to a child node that was last queried.